The object of the law, as all its details plainly show, was to have as fair an election as possible. The registry of voters as required was made and returned for these districts as follows, as will be seen by Mr. Stanton's proclamatics, orbibit, No. 2, 2, 1

Upon this return of registration, showing 9,251 voters, (which, upon all reasonable probabilities, must have been within one or two thousand of all the legal voters at that time in the Territory.) the acting governor, as will be seen from the same exhibit, made an apportionment of representation, according to the provisions of the act. This was done by dividing the whole number of voters (9,251) by 60, the number of delegates constituting the convention, and apportioning the delegates to the respective counties in districts, as above set forth, from which a registry had been reported. The apportionment was a follows;

4 do From this it will be seen that twenty-one out of the thirty-four organized counties were embraced in the apportion-ment; and the journals of the convention (exhibit No. 4) show that all these were represented in that body. From the same proclamation it will be seen that five election districts, embracing thirteen counties, were left out of the apportionment. These were as will appear from what apportionment. These were, as will appear from what has been stated, the 13th district, being Franklin county; the 14th, including Weller, Breckinridge, Wise, and Madison; the 15th, Butler and Coffee; the 17th, Anderson county; and the 19th, Woodson, Wilson, Greenwool, Godfry, and Hunter.

Of these thirteen counties nine had but a small population in them. This paracticism, the statement of Madison, them.

lation in them. This (apart from the statement of Mr. Calhoun and other reliable information) clearly appears from the returns of the election on the 4th January last, the official amouncement of which is filed with the pa-pers of this report. From that it will be seen that not a vote was returned as having been cast in that election in seven of these thirteen counties about the disfranchisement of which so much complaint has been made. These seven counties are Weller, Wise, Butler, Wilson, Godfry, Green-wood, and Hunter. Nor was there a vote at that election

California is well known. In that case a constitution had been sent up formed by a convention called together with out the alightest pretext of legal authority, either from Congress or any territorial organization. A proclamation of a military commander was the sole foundation for it, and yet upon that occasion Jodge Douglas said:

"I hold that the people of California had a right to do what they have done."

"I hold that the people of California had a right to do what they have done."

"I how any person could maintain the legality of the proceedings in the California case and deny them in Kansas, or hold that an enabling act by Congress was necessary in the Kansas case when it was not necessary in the Kansas case when it was not necessary in the Kansas case when it was not necessary in the Kansas case when it was not necessary in California, is incomprehensible to this committee. They dismiss this point without further remark.

But other objections of a different class and character have been started. These relate to the fairness of the lection of delegates to the constitutional convention, ton this head it is said that quite a number of counties, 19 in all, making more than half of the countes in the Territory, were disfranchised by the law of the 19th February, 1857, and were wholly represented in the convention. By the statutes of Kansas, as all can see by reference, there are 37 counties laid out with names and boundaries in the Territory. Three of these—to wit: Washington, Clay, and Dickinson—were omitted in the act of the 19th February creating districts for the election of delegates. They lie in the extreme western frontier of the contitution are so largely in the majerity in those of the Territory, as will be seen by the map, and exist and the second of the second of the second of the content of the second of that the present administration is illegal, and should be set aside, because the inaugurated Chief Magistrats did not receive a majority of all the legat voters of the United States, as for these people now to complain of the result of their own lesses or illegal acts, or to seek to remedy it by any such irregular proceeding as the vote taken on the 4th January against the constitution, after it had been legally adopted.

But the inquiry is made wheth.

4th Janeary against the constitution, after it had been legally adopted.

But the inquiry is made whether the constitution is acceptable and satisfactory to a majority of the legal voters of Kansas. This is a matter the committee could not ascertain and report upon with certainty without polling every legal voter in the Territory; and if they had gone there and taken the vote themselves for and against the constitution, perhaps the majority might have varied frum one side to the other, by death, emigration, or change of opinion, before their report could have been made. That course of investigation is wholly impracticable. The only proper mode of pursuing the legitimate inquiry before Congress, in the judgment of the committee, is to ascertain whether the constitution imbodied the legally and fairly-expressed will of those who by their acts acknowledge themselves to be bone fide citizens and constituent elements of the society or political community to be organized in a State within its jurisdiction. Those who by their acts show themselves not to be bone fide citizens, but only fide residents, and even self-acknowledge of the best in the first content of the Those who by their acts show themselves not to be bone fide citizens, but mala fide residents, and even self-acknowledged outlaws by their open hostility to all civil authority, should not be considered or taken in the count. The convention that formed the constitution was as fairly constituted as could be with the view of allowing every bone fide citizen in Kansus entitled to vote to have a free opportunity to be heard in its formation. This Mr. Stanton said; this Gov. Walker said; this Judge Donglas said; this also abundantly appears from the facts and evidence now submitted. The only correct test of the will of a majority of the bount bid voters of Kansas upon the sublect of their ity of the bena fide voters of Kansas upon the subject of their constitution is that of the ballot-box, and such an expression of their will as has been there given at the proppression of their will as has been there given at the prop-er time and place, in conformity to law. By this test a majority of them is certainly in favor of it. The ma-jority of those going to the polls when the election of delegates, with full and plenary power, took place, was largely in favor of those who made the constitution; and when the direct question on the slavery clause was submitted on the 21st December, the like majority was and when the direct question on the stavery clause was submitted on the 21st December, the like majority was overwhelmingly in favor of it. On the 4th January, in the election of State officers under the constitution, it is well known that both parties joined in a vigorous contest for the organization of the State under it. Upwards of 12,000 voters participated in that election. That vote shows most clearly that the constitution is net only acceptable, but has been accepted by at least four-fifths of the voters of the Territory, though it may not be entirely satisfactory to all of them.

As to the alleged frauds on the 4th January for State officers under the constitution, the committee have not deemed it pertinent or proper for them to enter into any investigation. They are matters to be inquired into and tried by other tribunals, as all frauds in other State elections are. This House can have no jurisdiction over them in any way—no more than they have over the frauds, if any, in the States of New York, Indiana, Illinois, or any other State in elections for State officers. Should Kansas be admitted, and the seat of the member returned to this House be contested on the heers. Should Kansas be admitted, and the seat of the member returned to this House be contested on the ground of alleged frauds, then this House would be the proper tribunal to decide that question. There will be other legitimate tribunals to decide all others.

Upon a review, then, of all these facts, and a survey of the whole field here presented as a question of public pelicy, looking not only to the present and future welfare of ley, looking not only to the present and future welfare of the people of Kansas, but to the peace and harmony of the whole Union, the committee, in conclusion, express their entire agreement with the President in his recom-mendation of the immediate admission of the State. That a large number of the States would look upon her rejection under all the circumstances with extreme sen-sitiveness, if not alarm, cannot be denied or doubted. This is natural. When they see that no new State has ever presented herself for admission with a constitution ever presented herself for admission with a constitution formed and adopted with greater regularity and more strictly in conformity to law—when they remember the irregularities that were waived on the admission of California, whose constitution was formed without any legal authority—when they see the irregularities in the case of Minnesota now applying, which will doubtless be waived—when they feel and know that no valid or wellwaived—when they feel and know that no valid or well-founded objection can be made to the constitution of Kansas either in its substance or manner of adoption, except that it recognises slavery so long as the sovereign State may choose to allow it—when they know that the fiat has gone forth by that party which mainly urges these unusual objections that no State whose constitution re-ognises slavery whall ever hereafter be admitted into which so much complaint his been made. These serie counties are Weller, Wise, Butler, Wilson, Godfry, Green wood, and Hunter. Now such there are no wood, and Hunter is the such that the counties of the three unorganised counties of Washing of the three unorganised counties of Washing of the three unorganised counties of Washing the Counties of the histon and Woodsom—there were but 90 votes cet—10 in the forur and 30 in the Inter; and hult 1,135 in the forur remaining—to wit: Franklin, 304; Breckinridge, 191; Coffee, 433; and Anderson, 171; so that if the election of the 4th January abould be received as evidence of anything, it would prove nothing more conclusively than that the classor about the disfranchisement of half the people of even a considerable portion of the people of the Territory, is utterly groundless, and resorted to the counties of the people of the Pranklin, Breckinridge, Anderson, and Coffee is understood. This is fully explained not only by the statement of Mr. Calhona siluede to, but by the deposition of Geo. Wilson, to be found in Senate Document No. 22, at this season. From those and other notorious facts, the real and true cause of a failure of registry of voters in these counties, and a consequent failure of representation being apportioned to them in the convention, too clearly appears to need much explanation. The parties in whose belian is the season. From those and other notorious facts, the real and true cause of a failure of representation being apportioned to them in the convention, too clearly appears to need much explanation. The parties in whose belian gaportioned to them in the convention to clearly appears to need much explanation. The parties in whose belian in the convention of the registry themselves. Since the second of the convention of the registry themselves. Since the second of the convention of the registry themselves, which is the proposed of the registry themselves, which is the proposed of the registry of the proposed of the registry themselves, the proposed of th unusual objections that no State whose constitution recognises slavery shall ever hereafter be admitted into the Union, and that the rejection of Kansas would increase and inflame that factious, sectional, and unconstitutional spirit—is it not natural that they should come to the conclusion that the real secret of its rejection is this bare recognition of an institution which forms the basis of their civil society? Is it not natural that this act would strongly tend to produce distrust towards the common government, by awakening a conviction that a determination is fixed by the majority never to allow another member of the federal family to enter the Union with institutions similar to theirs? Will not her rejection tend to weaken the bonds which hold the States to gether? These are grave questiens, involving in their

"The finest portions of the work are the descriptions of hunting and of the grand scenery of the North. Here the author's thought flows in native channels, and the beautiful pictures of the wild woods and lakes, and the myrtad phases of nature in forest, stream, and mountain, are painted with masterly and poetic skill."

[Profesiont Churchman.

"The author's power of description is traily extraordinary; the penpaintings are as exquisite in their kind as the colored landscapes of the masters. You see that the man has drank in art from his earliest life, and has the artist's double genuls, appreciation, and reproduction. Whatever may be the subject, it is placed before us with a vivid, a living beauty, equalled by no American writer we know."

[Donalt MacLeod in the N. F. Preeman's Journal.

"That Mr. Huntington has such a faculty and gifts may be seen by any one who will read ten pages of 'The Forest.' The aports, the adventures of an Indian hunting-ground, are put before the reader's mind with the sharp outlines, the hunter, and the breadth of real life. The incidents of the journey through the widerness, the moral interest growing up like flowers out of the comments material facts, are charmingly described."—Leudon Athenasius.

"We venture to say that no reader, great or small, who takes up this book ('The Fretty Plate') will lay it down unfinished. It tells the story of a story told to half a dozen children in a fire-lit parlor. Their comments peint in a few worsts the character of those who make them with such graphic power that we see the hashence before us. In this respect the book is quite remarkable. We have not met with one in which javenilic character was so discriminated and portrayed."
